1967MA belated press release...

LONDON (1 December, 1901): The Mad Satirical Monk, British Prime Minister to Her Imperial Majesty Victoria, today heaped scorn upon the ridiculous fabrications of Lucrezia II in her continued machinations directed toward the overthrow of the British Crown. "Humph!", he stated, "since Lucrezia has seen fit to support the absurd claims of Sir Edmund Mortimer, Earl of Snerd, WE will show Her! We hereby rescind the Treaty of Amens." The treaty of Amens, of course, was where the English Monarchy foolishly gave up its rightful, just, and legitimate claims to the crown of France...

LONDON (2 December, 1901): In an exclusive interview with your reporter today, the Mad Satirical Monk commented upon the recent claims of the Borgia family (printed only in France, Austria and Russia) that it has been in power for 200 years in France. "Nonsense!" he emphasized. "Why, it was only three years ago that I myself helped the the Borgias come to power in France. Ah, yes, those were the days. I can still remember how innocent Lucrezia was in those days...until she met me, that is. She was only a dear child of 17, and rather inexperienced, at that. Well, after properly instructing her, I introduced her to General Deroulede. With my protege at his side, the general soon had an almost unanimous majority of parlement backing him, especially those notoriously immoral Socialists. As I recall, the one member of parlement not backing the Deroulede dictatorship was a M. Gofere Walquirie, but, then, this was understandable since he suffered from some sort of problem which made him invulnerable to the advances of Lucrezia. But, back to the story. After the Dictatorship was established, Deroulede expected Lucrezia to marry him. At first, she refused, for my sake, but I gently pointed out the possibilities inherent in the situation, whereupon she reluctantly agreed to the union. From there it was simple to have the Act of Dictatorial Succession promulgated. Of course, the papers reported the death of the general to be a result of German bacteriological warfare, but WE know better than that, now, don't we? Anyway, you may plainly see from all this that Queen Victoria's claims to the French throne are far better than Lucrezia's!" Your reporter remarked that this was all very interesting and informative, but that it fascinated him why the Mad Satirical Monk would leave Lucrezia once she was in Power, since she admittedly has such 'assets'. The Monk sadly replied: "I had to leave her, but it became imperative. You see, she insisted that I violate all my principles and marry her..." Your reporter nodded knowingly, since the Monk was obviously referring to his vows of celibacy. Obviously...

MISKATONIC UNIVERSITY is the Diplomacy bulletin published by A.B. Swenson. It is possibly distinguished by the proposition of 5-position Napoleonic Diplomacy actions run, but has no other claims to notice. "Miskatonic University", of course, is in reference to the institution of that name featured by H.P. Lovecraft and others in certain fantastic fiction written in the decades of the 1930's and 1940's.

The tiny North African coastal principality of Sirocco played host to the most illustrious college of world leaders to meet within the last hemisphere, according to world map intimates. Descending from his platinum pleasure yacht, the Super-dardnought Hyperbolic King, Emperor Goliath I of the Turko-Roman Empire was met with showers of mana from an Unlabeled Source. Awaiting his arrival were top officials of France and Great Britain eager to discuss the matter of world peace. Grand Archduke Lothar Foz, ruler of Sirocco, played homage to his guests, calling the emperor a distinguished statesman and "Yes, I am not bursting upon the land in a torrent of Allah's blessings, the Word of the Inner High spilling down from his golden lips like jewels from the coffers of Paradise." French Foreign Minister Gilles de Rais Salento and British Home Secretary Hoberg, like American us, also accorded the honor of a terse nod of greeting from the ruler.

The meeting took place in a heavily guarded souvenir warehouse, the only permanent building in the underdeveloped nation. Glasses of the local fermented olive oil are provided by the Grand Archprince at regular intervals. "We spare no expense to treat the Heaven-sent stormcloud and mightily crashing thunderbolt of the East, as well as his Babylonian guests!" proclaimed the ruler at frequent intervals throughout the day. Diplomats remained at their posts, following the mobile refreshment stands on foot, until the other dignitaries reappeared late that afternoon.

Still burdened with papers of state and souvenirs of hand-painted chewing gum and illuminated lacquered chicken entrails, the trip spoke to the press, emphasizing the gravity of the tensions besetting the world and stressing the need for collaboration in solving the weighty problems causing rifts within the fabric of international placidity. "Farthest from peace", indicated the British delegate, "is the unavoidable question of war, a state of hostility which must ever be opposed to and foreign to the concerns of man of peace, as well as repugnant to the very extreme of their personal philosophies."

Not to be forgotten, though," supplemented the French Minister, "is the central importance of the issue itself, without which one would lack the necessary support to maintain our global crises as now threatened to inundate the suffering babes and tremulous mothers of our nations with deluges of blood in an unthinkable inhuman manner which we of age and time so often spoken of with lips curled with scorn and rejection."

Kaiser Goliath closed the press conference with the solemn assurance that his government would do everything possible to end the threat of war for once and all, particularly in the turbulent South-West Europe area. "Pax Romanus vobiscum," he devoutly assured the other delegates.
